NASHVILLE, TENNESSEE

Belle Meade at 625 Westview Ave, Nashville, is a genteel estate of immense proportions, designed in the Mediterranean architectural style and decorated to a level of opulence rarely seen outside of the palaces of Europe. The owners who commissioned the home, The Pitts, wanted a home big enough for three generations — and then they just added stuff. “It was created out of love for Keith’s dad,” said wife Deby Pitts in The Tennessean newspaper. “and a desire to have a wine cellar got out of hand.” Indeed the cellar, handcrafted in redwood, is very noteworthy in its ocean liner styling and the fact it holds 16,000 bottles. However the attention to detail spreads throughout the eight bedroom mansion, with lacquered walls, coffered ceilings and endless and quite exquisite detailing inside and out. The kitchen? Did I mention the kitchen? Hooley dooley. This listing is with the local agency French King who have several properties that frankly make your eyes roll back in your head. I still can’t believe this is found in the country music capital of the world, because this house, well it has Mozart written all over it.

A tad under $14 million
